

Leavin' & Lovin'

July 2007

Bulge Divulge

So, if thin is in, pregnancy is in-er. Case in point: Rock Star Momma—the hip guide to looking gorgeous through all nine months and beyond by Skye Hoppus, wife of Blink-182 and +44 frontman Mark Hoppus. With so many femme celebs gettin' knocked up these days, I braved the cutesy and kid-friendly Treehouse Social Club to see why this how-to book has their panties bustin' at the seams.

Joely Fisher, lookin' fit and fab as evah in skinny jeans, a white blouse and tan pumps, hosted the celebration and was in good spirits when I asked her what the sexiest thing was about being with bambino.

"I think having a baby is the sexiest, bravest thing a woman can do. I mean, now that I'm not pregnant, I can fit into a nice boob top" (yeah, that was hard not to notice), "but I loved being pregnant." And what are her thoughts about dressing age appropriate? "I don't think you should be wearing microminis into your 50s... unless you have the legs for it!" the very un-desperate housewife laughed.

Also lookin' about 10 years younger than her actual age was Brooke Burke, dressed in a tasteful tan dress, crystal stilettos and matching fatty diamond ring. B.B. spent the party chatting with fellow hot mama Tia Carrere and playing with her darling eldest daughter, Neriah.

"What was the sexiest thing about being pregnant?" I asked the totally down-to-earth duo. "What was sexy about being pregnant was that my husband thought I was sexy pregnant. I was like 'Oh, you like this extra roll here... okay, great!' was T-baby's self-deprecating, somewhat worrisome response. Your husband sounds like a nice liar or lover, maybe both.

